

◆ Summary

The IPOX Indexes closed higher last week, in what appeared to be option-expiration-driven upside bias in the main benchmark indexes. The US IPO market returned to some form after two successful small-cap offerings. IPOX to exhibit at the CFA Institute Annual Conference (April 26-29).

◆ Highlights

IPOX Global Universe:

- The IPOX Global Indexes closed higher for a sixth straight week with the key IPOX-30 Global Index (IPGL30) almost exactly matching the performance of the S&P 500 as virtually all IPOX Indexes are now trading in positive territory YTD.
- Amid declining volatility towards option expiration Friday, movements in the broad benchmarks had a strong upside bias towards the end of the week, as early weakness in the Nasdaq on Intel was met with selling resilience in the S&P 500 and Dow Jones as the Financial Sector continued to recover on positive earnings news and emerging markets (China) continued to trade higher.

- Most upside action in IPOX Global constituents was driven by beaten-down constituents and sectors such as Renewable Energy (12.26%), IPOX health-care Covidien (+9.18%) or IPOX Materials Eurasian (+12.12%), while large-cap European utilities and alternative energy companies continued to underperformed.

IPOX Developed Markets Universe:

- With markets trending higher, the IPOX U.S. Indexes managed to maintain the lead versus the S&P 500 with the broad IPOX-100 U.S. Index (IPXO) again outperforming the narrower IPOX-30 U.S. Index due to a larger exposure to outperforming U.S. small-caps.
- Heavy exposure to alternative energy and utilities led to another week of relative weakness of the IPOX-30 Europe Index (IXTE) versus the European benchmarks while the broader JP Morgan IPOX Europe 50 Index (IPXUJPEU) performed in line.
- The IPOX-30 Asia-Pacific Index (IPTA), capturing the performance of the largest/most liquid IPOs and spin-off in developed Asia-Pacific, continued to perform strongly, extending the YTD lead vs. MXPC to 1094 bps. Notable is IPTAs 50% exposure to Japan.
